

Molly Tomeny began studying ballet at age six at the Doris Marsh School of Classical Ballet in Saginaw, MI. She continued her studies at Virginia Ballet Theater (Norfolk, VA), the Performing Arts School of Classical Ballet (San Antonio, TX) and Central Pennsylvania Youth Ballet (Carlisle, PA). In 2007, Tomeny graduated from the Franklin W. Olin College of Engineering with a BSc in Mechanical Engineering. After working several years in the engineering field, she returned to ballet, dancing professionally with Roxey Ballet (Lambertville, NJ) and Contrapose Dance (Cambridge, MA).

A Dance teacher in the greater Boston area since 2008, Tomeny aims to give her students a life-long appreciation for dance.

Whether through the history, music, performance or choreography, she tries to learn how each student connects to dance and what inspires them to keep returning to classes week after week.
